INTRODUCTION

The Rescission policy challenged here provides for an orderly wind-down of Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (“DACA”), an exercise of prosecutorial discretion that, from the start, confers no rights and has been subject to change. Pursuant to the Rescission, recipients whose DACA status expires before March 5, 2018, have the opportunity to renew that status, and current DACA recipients will maintain their status for the remaining duration of their deferred-action grants. Plaintiffs in these five related actions nonetheless seek, as “provisional relief,” the immediate and wholesale reinstatement of that policy.

This Court should reject that gambit because Plaintiffs cannot meet the exacting standard for preliminary relief. Plaintiffs are unlikely to succeed on the merits of their Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”) claims because those claims are not even justiciable. But even if they were, the Acting Secretary of Homeland Security adequately explained her decision to wind down DACA: A legally indistinguishable policy (including an expansion of DACA) had been enjoined on a nationwide basis by a district court in Texas; that injunction was upheld by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit; that decision, in turn, was affirmed by an equally divided Supreme Court; and the same plaintiffs were about to sue over DACA before the same judge in Texas. Faced with the inevitable prospect of an immediate, nationwide injunction against DACA, the Acting Secretary chose an orderly wind-down. Due to the near-certainty that DACA otherwise would have been abruptly invalidated, that decision was eminently reasonable, and certainly not arbitrary and capricious. Plaintiffs also argue that the Rescission was subject to the APA’s notice-and-comment requirements, but those requirements are inapplicable to a general statement of policy such as the Rescission, and Plaintiffs’ argument is self-defeating in any event because DACA itself likewise was adopted without notice and comment.

Nor can Plaintiffs demonstrate that any of the harms they have identified can be resolved by a preliminary injunction entered by this Court months before the March 5, 2018 deadline. Plaintiffs complain about lost professional opportunities, the inability to make long-term plans, and the angst surrounding the Rescission Policy, but none of these harms can be ameliorated by the type of temporary relief—which will last only through the end of this litigation—that Plaintiffs

1 seek. Nor can Plaintiffs demonstrate that the balance of the equities and the public interest weigh 2 in their favor. Finally, the relief that Plaintiffs seek—a wholesale but temporary reinstatement of 3 the DACA policy—is overbroad and improper. The Court should deny Plaintiffs’ motion.

4 BACKGROUND

5 A. Deferred Action Generally

6 The Secretary of Homeland Security is charged “with the administration and 7 enforcement” of the Immigration and Nationality Act along with “all other laws relating to the 8 immigration and naturalization of aliens.” 8 U.S.C. § 1103(a)(1). Under these laws, individuals 9 are subject to removal if, among other things, “they were inadmissible at the time of entry, have 10 been convicted of certain crimes, or meet other criteria set by federal law.” Arizona v. United 11 States, 567 U.S. 387, 396 (2012) (citation omitted); see 8 U.S.C. §§ 1182(a), 1227(a).

12 Due to resource constraints, the federal government cannot remove every removable alien, 13 which means that a “principal feature of the removal system is the broad discretion exercised by 14 immigration officials.” Arizona, 567 U.S. at 396 (citation omitted). Department of Homeland 15 Security officials must first “decide whether it makes sense to pursue removal at all,” id., and 16 once proceedings begin, they may decide to grant certain forms of discretionary relief expressly 17 authorized by statute, such as asylum or parole, 8 U.S.C. §§ 1158(b)(1)(A), 1182(d)(5)(A), 1229b.
 18 “At each stage” of the process, “the Executive has discretion to abandon the endeavor” entirely.
 19 Reno v. Am.-Arab Anti-Discrimination Comm. (AADC), 525 U.S. 471, 483 (1999).

20 “One form of discretion the Secretary of Homeland Security exercises is ‘deferred action,’ 21 which entails temporarily postponing the removal of individuals unlawfully present in the United 22 States.” Arpaio v. Obama, 797 F.3d 11, 16 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (citation omitted), cert. denied, 136 23 S. Ct. 900 (2016). Deferred action is a practice by which the Secretary exercises her “discretion 24 to abandon” the removal process, and to notify an individual alien of a non-binding decision to 25 forbear from seeking his removal for a set period. AADC, 525 U.S. at 483; see 8 C.F.R.
 26 § 274a.12(c)(14) (describing “deferred action” as “an act of administrative convenience to the 27 government which gives some cases lower priority”). Although originally “developed without 28 express statutory authority,” individualized deferred action has been recognized by Congress in

1 certain circumstances inapplicable here, see, e.g., 8 U.S.C. § 1154(a)(1)(D)(i)(II), (IV) (providing 2 that certain individuals are “eligible for deferred action”), and described by the Supreme Court as 3 an “exercise in administrative discretion,” AADC, 525 U.S. at 484. Deferred action (or a similar 4 form of relief) dates back to the 1960s, Arpaio, 797 F.3d at 16, and DHS and the former INS have 5 adopted more than 20 such policies over the past 50 years.

6 A variety of consequences may flow from a decision to defer removal action, including 7 the ability to apply for work authorization, see, e.g., 8 C.F.R. § 274a.12(c)(14), but a grant of 8 deferred action does not confer lawful immigration status or provide any defense to removal. Cf.
 9 Chaudhry v. Holder, 705 F.3d 289, 292 (7th Cir. 2013) (discussing difference between “unlawful 10 presence” and “unlawful status”). To the contrary, deferred action is “discretionary and 11 reversible, and ‘confers no substantive right, immigration status or pathway to citizenship.’” 12 Arpaio, 797 F.3d at 17 (citation omitted). DHS thus has discretion to revoke deferred action 13 unilaterally, for any reason or no reason, with or without notice, and an individual with deferred 14 action remains removable at any time. See AADC, 525 U.S. at 484–85.

15 B. DACA and DAPA

16 On June 15, 2012, then-Secretary Janet Napolitano announced the policy now known as 17 DACA, or Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals. See Admin. R. (AR) 1–3 (hereinafter DACA 18 Memo), ECF No. 64-1.¹ DACA made deferred action available to “certain young people who 19 were brought to this country as children” in violation of the immigration laws. Id. at 1 (AR 1).
 20 Following completion of a background check, successful requestors would receive deferred 21 action for a period of two years, subject to indefinite renewal. Id. at 2–3 (AR 2–3).

22 The DACA Memo stated that deferred action was an “exercise of prosecutorial 23 discretion,” id. at 1 (AR 1), and that requests for this relief would “be decided on a case by case 24 basis,” id. at 2 (AR 2). Accordingly, the Memo provided that this grant of deferred action 25 “confer[red] no substantive right, immigration status or pathway to citizenship. Only the 26 Congress, acting through its legislative authority, can confer these rights.” Id. at 3 (AR 3).

Defendants’ Mem. In Opp. to Mot. For Provisional Relief

1 In 2014, then-Secretary Jeh Johnson expanded DACA and created a new, similar policy
 2 known as Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents, or DAPA.
 3 See AR 37–41 (hereinafter DAPA Memo). DAPA made deferred action available to certain 4 unlawfully present aliens who were “parents of U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents.”
 5 DAPA Memo 3 (AR 39). The DAPA Memo also expanded DACA by relaxing some of the 6 guidelines and extending the DACA renewal period from two to three years. Id. at 3–4 (AR 39– 7 40).

8 C. The Texas Litigation

9 The DAPA Memo—including its expansion of DACA—was challenged by a coalition of 10 26 states, led by Texas, which sought to enjoin its implementation. Affirming the district court, 11 the Fifth Circuit upheld a nationwide preliminary injunction against implementation of DAPA 12 and expanded DACA. Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 147–48, (5th Cir. 2015). Like the 13 U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas, the Fifth Circuit held that the promulgation 14 of the DAPA Memo was justiciable, in part because it believed that “the INA’s intricate regulatory 15 scheme for changing immigration classifications” allowed the court to determine whether DHS 16 had exceeded its statutory authority. Id. at 168. It stressed, however, that the denial of deferred 17 action and work authorization would be unreviewable. Id. Also like the district court, the Fifth 18 Circuit held that the DAPA Memo failed to comply with the Administrative Procedure Act’s 19 notice-and-comment requirement, but emphasized that “DAPA is much more than a 20 nonenforcement policy,” and that “a traditional nonenforcement policy would not necessarily be 21 subject to notice and comment.” Id. at 178 n.156. And going beyond the district court, the Fifth 22 Circuit held that DAPA was “manifestly contrary” to the INA, in part because, unlike prior 23 deferred-action policies that served as “bridges from one legal status to another,” DAPA and 24 expanded DACA awarded deferred action “to persons who have never had a legal status and may 25 never receive one.” Id. at 184, 186 (footnotes omitted).

26 That decision was affirmed by an equally divided Supreme Court, United States v. Texas, 27 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (per curiam), which later denied the government’s request for a rehearing 28 upon confirmation of a ninth Justice, 137 S. Ct. 285 (2016), leaving the preliminary injunction in

1 place. On November 18, 2016, the parties jointly moved the district court to stay merits 2 proceedings to allow them to evaluate “how they might choose to move forward” given the 3 upcoming “change in Administration[s].” Joint Mot. to Stay Merits ¶ 2, Texas v. United States, 4 No. 1:14-cv-254 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 18, 2016), ECF No. 430.

5 Faced with continued litigation over a policy that had been enjoined by the courts, DHS 6 rescinded the DAPA Memo on June 15, 2017, including its provisions expanding DACA. See 7 Memorandum for Kevin McAleenan, Acting Comm’r, U.S. Customs and Border Prot., et al., from 8 John F. Kelly, Sec’y of Homeland Sec., Re: Rescission of November 20, 2014 Memorandum
 9 Providing for Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents (June 10 15, 2017), AR 235-37. Plaintiffs do not challenge that decision here.

11 On June 29, 2017, Texas and several other states threatened to amend their complaint to 12 also challenge directly the DACA Memo, noting that it suffers from the same legal flaws that the 13 courts had identified in expanded DACA and DAPA. See AR 238–40 (Paxton Letter).

14 D. Rescission of DACA

15 Faced with a losing case, Acting Secretary Duke decided on September 5, 2017, to wind 16 down the DACA policy in an orderly fashion. See AR 252–56 (Rescission Policy or Policy). As 17 she explained, “[t]aking into consideration the Supreme Court’s and the Fifth Circuit’s rulings in 18 the ongoing litigation, and the September 4, 2017 letter from the Attorney General, it is clear that 19 the June 15, 2012 DACA program should be terminated.” Rescission Policy 4 (AR 255).
 20 Specifically, she quoted the Attorney General’s September 4 recommendation to rescind DACA, 21 which explained that because DACA “has the same legal and constitutional defects that the courts 22 recognized as to DAPA, it is likely that potentially imminent litigation would yield similar 23 results.” Id. at 3 (AR 254). Invoking her “authority in establishing national immigration policies 24 and priorities,” she rescinded the DACA Memo, id. at 4 (AR 255), and instructed that deferred 25 action should instead be provided “only on an individualized[,] case-by-case basis,” id. at 2 (AR 26 253).

27 At the same time, to facilitate an orderly transition, the Rescission Policy provides that:

- 28 • For current DACA recipients, DHS “[w]ill not terminate the grants of previously issued deferred action or revoke Employment Authorization Documents solely

1 based on the directives in this memorandum for the remaining duration of their 2 validity periods.” Id. at 4 (AR 255).

- 3 • For initial DACA requests, DHS “[w]ill adjudicate—on an individual, case-by-4 case basis—properly filed pending DACA initial requests and associated 5 applications for Employment Authorization Documents that have been accepted
 6 by [DHS] as of” September 5, 2017, but “[w]ill reject all DACA initial requests 7 and associated applications for Employment Authorization Documents filed after” 8 that date. Id.
- 9 • For DACA renewal requests, DHS “[w]ill adjudicate—on an individual, case by 10 case basis—properly filed pending DACA renewal requests and associated 11 applications for Employment Authorization Documents from current beneficiaries 12 that have been accepted by [DHS] as of” September 5, 2017. Further, DHS will 13 similarly adjudicate such requests and applications “from current beneficiaries 14 whose [deferred action under DACA] will expire between [September 5, 2017,] 15 and March 5, 2018[,] that have been accepted by the Department as of October 5, 16 2017.” Id.

17 Like the DACA and DAPA Memos, the Rescission Policy notes that it “is not intended to, does 18 not, and may not be relied upon to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, 19 enforceable at law by any party in any administrative, civil, or criminal matter.” Id. at 5 (AR 20 256). Accordingly, DHS will “continue to exercise its discretionary authority to terminate or 21 deny deferred action at any time.” Id. at 4 (AR 255).

22 E. Plaintiffs’ Motion for Provisional Relief

23 While Plaintiffs have brought a panoply of claims, their motion for provisional relief is 24 limited to two claims brought pursuant to the APA. First, Plaintiffs allege that the Rescission 25 Policy is arbitrary and capricious and therefore violates the APA because it constitutes a change 26 in agency policy without an adequate explanation or basis; second, they allege that the rescission
 27 violates the APA because it was issued without notice and comment.²

28 Plaintiffs ask the Court to “direct[] . . . the government to restore the DACA program 29 pending adjudication on the merits,” Pls. Br. 37, and to order Defendants to adjudicate newly 30 submitted initial requests for deferred action and employment authorizations, renewal requests 31 for deferred action and employment authorizations, and applications for advance parole “using

5 STANDARD OF REVIEW

6 A preliminary injunction “is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be 7 granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion.” *Mazurek v.
 8 Armstrong*, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (per curiam) (quoting 11A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur 9 R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2948, pp. 129-30 (2d ed. 1995)). A plaintiff “must 10 establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in 11 the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an 12 injunction is in the public interest.” Am. Trucking Ass’ns v. City of Los Angeles, 559 F.3d 1046, 13 1052 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (2008)). A 14 “possibility” of irreparable harm is insufficient; irreparable harm must be likely absent an 15 injunction. Id.; see also Winter, 555 U.S. at 22 (rejecting the Ninth Circuit’s earlier rule that the 16 “possibility” of irreparable harm, as opposed to its likelihood, was sufficient in some 17 circumstances to justify a preliminary injunction). The Ninth Circuit has determined that its 18 alternative “sliding scale” test is still valid after Winter, but even that approach still requires 19 “serious questions going to the merits” and a balance of hardships that tips sharply toward the 20 plaintiff [in order to] support issuance of a preliminary injunction, so long as the plaintiff also 21 shows that there is a likelihood of irreparable injury and that the injunction is in the public 22 interest.” All. for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 632 F.3d 1127, 1135 (9th Cir. 2011); see also 23 Leiva-Perez v. Holder, 640 F.3d 962, 967-68 (9th Cir. 2011). Plaintiffs bear the burden of 24 demonstrating that each of these four factors is met. DISH Network Corp. v. FCC, 653 F.3d 771,

ARGUMENT

PLAINTIFFS FAIL TO ESTABLISH A LIKELIHOOD OF SUCCESS ON THE MERITS OF THEIR APA CLAIMS

Plaintiffs' APA Claims Are Not Justiciable

As a threshold matter, Plaintiffs cannot succeed on the merits because, as set forth in Defendants' pending Motion to Dismiss, Plaintiffs' APA claims are not justiciable. See Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss 14-19, ECF No. 114. The APA bars judicial review of certain categories of decisions that "courts traditionally have regarded as 'committed to agency discretion.'" Lincoln v. Vigil, 508 U.S. 182, 191 (1993) (quoting 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2)). Quintessential among the types of decisions committed to executive discretion are "an agency's exercise of enforcement power," Heckler v. Chaney, 470 U.S. 821, 833 (1985), regardless whether that exercise of discretion results in a decision to prosecute or enforce, or to refrain from doing so, id. at 831. This bar applies even when "the agency gives a 'reviewable' reason for otherwise unreviewable action." ICC v. Bhd. Of Locomotive Eng'rs (BLE), 482 U.S. 270, 283 (1987). This is particularly true in the context of immigration, in which executive decisions implicate distinct foreign-policy and separation-of-powers concerns, and discretion is, accordingly, very broad. AADC, 525 U.S. at 489-90; Arizona, 567 U.S. at 396-97. The Rescission Policy is a classic example of a discretionary enforcement determination entrusted to the agency alone. Indeed, any attempt to judge the Policy would entangle this Court in the sort of complex and discretionary balancing that has been entrusted by Congress to the Executive Branch. The decision to rescind DACA is thus unreviewable. See 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2).

The INA also deprives federal district courts of jurisdiction over challenges to denials of deferred action, see 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g). This provision, which Congress enacted to prohibit “attempts to impose judicial constraints upon prosecutorial discretion,” AADC, 525 U.S. at 485 & n.9, “seems clearly designed to give some measure of protection to ‘no deferred action’ decisions and similar discretionary determinations, providing that if they are reviewable at all,

1 they at least will not be made the bases for separate rounds of judicial intervention outside” an 2 individual removal proceeding. Id. at 485. Denials of deferred action—including under DACA 3 itself—thus fall outside the jurisdiction of the federal district courts. This is reason enough to 4 deny Plaintiffs’ request for provisional relief.

5 I. The Acting Secretary Rationally Explained Her Decision to Rescind DACA, 6 Particularly Given the Imminent Likelihood of a Nationwide Injunction Based 7 On Controlling Circuit Precedent

8 Even were the decision to rescind DACA subject to judicial review, Plaintiffs cannot 9 succeed in showing that decision to be arbitrary and capricious. It is axiomatic that agencies are 10 free to change course on policy matters so long as they provide a rational explanation and the new 11 policy is legally permissible. Here, the Acting Secretary’s explanation of her decision to rescind 12 DACA readily meets this deferential standard, particularly in view of the virtual certainty of a 13 nationwide injunction based on controlling circuit precedent, which would have prompted an 14 immediate—and chaotic—end to the policy.

15 Under the APA, an agency’s decision must be upheld unless arbitrary, capricious, an abuse
 16 of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law. 5 U.S.C. § 706(2)(A)–(B). The agency’s 17 decision is presumed valid under this standard, and the Court asks only whether it “was based on 18 a consideration of the relevant factors and whether there has been a clear error of judgment.”
Citizens to Preserve Overton Park, Inc. v. Volpe, 401 U.S. 402, 416 (1971), abrogated on other 19 grounds by Califano v. Sanders, 430 U.S. 99 (1977). Agency action is arbitrary and capricious 20 only when the agency “has relied on factors which Congress has not intended it to consider, 21 entirely failed to consider an important aspect of the problem, [or] offered an explanation for its 22 decision that runs counter to the evidence before the agency,” or the decision “is so implausible 23 that it could not be ascribed to a difference in view or the product of agency expertise.” Motor 24 Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n v. State Farm, 463 U.S. 29, 43 (1983). The Court may not “substitute its 25 judgment for that of the agency.” Id.

26 The Rescission Policy amply meets these “minimal standards of rationality,” Troy Corp.
 27 v. Browner, 120 F.3d 277, 283 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (citation omitted), particularly in view of the 28 near-certain litigation loss in the impending Texas lawsuit. In the Policy, the Acting Secretary
All DACA Cases (Nos. 17-5211, 17-5235, 17-5329, 17-5380, 17-5813)
Defendants’ Mem. In Opp. to Mot. For Provisional Relief

1 explained that, “[t]aking into consideration the Supreme Court’s and the Fifth Circuit’s rulings in 2 the ongoing litigation, and the September 4, 2017 letter from the Attorney General, it is clear that
 3 the June 15, 2012 DACA program should be terminated.” Rescission Policy 4 (AR 255).
 4 Specifically, after summarizing the Texas litigation and the nationwide injunction against DAPA 5 (and its expansion of DACA), she quoted the Attorney General’s view that because DACA “has 6 the same legal and constitutional defects that the courts recognized as to DAPA, it is likely that 7 potentially imminent litigation would yield similar results.” Id. at 3 (AR 254) (citation omitted).
 8 The Acting Secretary thus concluded that maintaining the DACA Policy would, in all likelihood, 9 result in another nationwide injunction plunging the policy, and its nearly 800,000 recipients, into 10 immediate uncertainty.

11 The Acting Secretary was thus “faced with two options: wind the program down in an 12 orderly fashion that protects beneficiaries in the near-term while working with Congress to pass 13 legislation; or allow the judiciary to potentially shut the program down completely and 14 immediately.” Press Release, DHS, Statement from Acting Secretary Duke on the Rescission of 15 DACA (Sept. 5, 2017) (hereinafter Duke Statement), <https://go.usa.gov/xncuM>. She reasonably 16 opted for an orderly rescission, which she considered “the least disruptive option.” Id.

17 That decision was eminently reasonable. There is nothing at all irrational about the choice 18 or the explanation. Plaintiffs’ arguments to the contrary are wrong at each turn.

19 A. Plaintiffs principally claim that the Rescission Policy fails to provide “any clear 20 explanation why” DACA was rescinded, leaving them merely “to guess” at the Acting Secretary’s 21 reasoning. Pls.’ Br. 17. That argument blinks reality. Even if the agency were not free to revoke 22 deferred action at any time for any reason—or, indeed, for no reason, see, e.g., Arpaio, 797 F.3d
 23 at 17; DAPA Memo 2 (AR 38)—no guesswork is required to understand the agency’s reasoning 24 here: As the balance of their brief demonstrates, Plaintiffs clearly comprehend the basis for the 25 Acting Secretary’s decision. For example, while Plaintiffs purport to be “perplex[ed]” by the 26 Acting Secretary’s reference to the litigation risk posed by the Texas case, Pls.’ Br. 17, they 27 understood this rationale well enough to devote a separate section of their brief to addressing it, 28

1 ¹ id. at 27–29 (arguing that “Purported ‘Litigation Risk’ Cannot Justify the Rescission”).³
 2 Likewise, while they claim to be confused by the Attorney General’s views on DACA’s legality, 3 which they deem too “conclusory,” id. at 17, this issue is also directly addressed in a separate 4 section of their brief, id. at 23–25 (arguing that “DACA is … lawful”).

5 At bottom, then, Plaintiffs’ argument reduces to a claim that the Rescission Policy was 6 just too short. See, e.g., id. at 17 (complaining that the “four-page Rescission memorandum” has 7 a “two-and-a-half-page Background section”). But under the APA, whether an agency’s decision
 8 is sustainable turns not on its length, but its rationality. Here, there is no reason to adopt Plaintiffs’
 9 myopic focus on the “66-word paragraph” setting forth the Acting Secretary’s conclusion, id., 10 while ignoring the rest of the document, which lays the foundation for that conclusion and 11 elaborates on the reasoning behind it. See Rescission Policy 1 (AR 252) (noting, in the 12 introduction, that DACA will be rescinded “[f]or the reasons … outlined below”); id. at 2–3 (AR
 13 253–54) (explaining, as background, that DAPA and expanded DACA were “substantially 14 similar” to DACA, that the Fifth Circuit had invalidated the DAPA Memo, and that the Attorney 15 General had concluded that “it is likely that potentially imminent litigation would yield similar 16 results with respect to DACA”). Indeed, Plaintiffs’ suggestion that length should be 17 determinative calls into question the rationality of the original DACA Memo itself, which of 18 course spanned only three pages. See DACA Memo 1–3 (AR 1–3).

19 The Court “must uphold an agency action—even if it is made with ‘less than ideal 20 clarity’—as long as ‘the agency’s path may reasonably be discerned’ from the record.” Managed 21 Pharm. Care v. Sebelius, 716 F.3d 1235, 1250 (9th Cir. 2013) (quoting State Farm, 463 U.S. at 22 43); Shepard v. NLRB, 459 U.S. 344, 348, 350–51 (1983); see also, e.g., All. for the Wild Rockies 23 v. Ashe, 687 F. App’x 657, 659 (9th Cir. 2017) (accepting a “somewhat conclusory” explanation

24
 25 ³ Plaintiffs’ assertion that the “Supreme Court’s purported ‘ruling’ … in the Texas DAPA case 26 … was no ‘ruling’ at all,” Pls.’ Br. 17, is mistaken. The affirmance by an equally divided Supreme 27 Court meant that: (1) the Fifth Circuit’s decision invalidating DAPA and expanded DACA would 28 have been controlling precedent in the lower courts in the impending lawsuit challenging DACA; and (2) four Justices agreed with the Fifth Circuit’s decision, such that the only way a different result would occur for DACA in the Supreme Court would have been if one of the four changed their mind or the newly seated Justice disagreed.

1 where “the agencies’ ‘path may reasonably be discerned’ from other evidence in the record”) 2 (citation omitted). Here, the Acting Secretary’s decision is clear, and her path is plain. Plaintiffs’ 3 suggestion to the contrary is unconvincing.

4 B. Plaintiffs next contend that, in adopting the Rescission Policy, the Acting Secretary 5 “failed to consider all relevant factors”—namely, the asserted economic effects of rescission and 6 its consequences for DACA recipients. Pls.’ Br. 18–20. For starters, this argument fails to reckon 7 with the reality—referenced in the Acting Secretary’s memo—that continued litigation would, in 8 all likelihood, have led to an abrupt, complete, and court-ordered end to DACA, plunging its nearly 9 800,000 recipients into uncertainty. The APA did not require the Acting Secretary to consider 10 factors that were inevitable or ponder how to prevent the unavoidable. See State Farm, 463 U.S. 11 at 43 (noting that an agency must simply “examine the relevant data and articulate a satisfactory 12 explanation for its action”).

13 Indeed, the Acting Secretary’s decision instead to opt for an orderly wind-down of the 14 policy thus likely ameliorated, rather than exacerbated, the effects about which Plaintiffs 15 complain, as she was fully aware.

16 The Rescission Policy itself recognizes that, while DACA recipients were “eligibl[e] to 17 request employment authorization” documents, enabling them to work lawfully in the United 18 States, Rescission Policy 2 (AR 253), that eligibility would sunset along with the DACA policy, 19 id. at 4 (AR 255), necessarily leading to changes in the workforce over the following two and a 20 half years. Likewise, recognizing that DACA recipients would no longer be considered lawfully 21 present once their deferred action expired, the Acting Secretary explained that she was “very 22 aware of the consequences of this action, and . . . sympathize[d] with the DACA recipients whose 23 futures may now be less certain.” Duke Statement. It was such considerations—i.e., the 24 “complexities associated with winding down the program,” Rescission Policy 4 (AR 255)—that 25 influenced her to allow DACA to sunset over a number of years, rather than abruptly end the 26 policy herself or under court order. That these factors did not upend her ultimate decision to 27 rescind the policy, however, is no reason to set that decision aside, because clinging to DACA in 28 the face of the Texas litigation would have been quixotic rather than rational.

Even where a statute sets forth specific factors for an agency to consider, if Congress “did not assign the specific weight the [agency] should accord each of these factors, [the agency] is free to exercise [its] discretion in this area.” New York v. Reilly, 969 F.2d 1147, 1150 (D.C. Cir. 1992) (citation omitted); Brady v. FERC, 416 F.3d 1, 6 (D.C. Cir. 2005); see also Sec'y of Agriculture v. Cent. Roig Ref. Co., 338 U.S. 604, 611–12 (1950) (where statutorily mandated “consideration[s]” are not “mechanical or self-defining standards,” they indicate Congress’s recognition that they involve “wide areas of judgment and therefore of discretion”). Here, of course, no statute dictates the factors for an agency to consider in granting or rescinding deferred action; on the contrary, deferred action is an exercise of prosecutorial discretion in the government’s interests committed to agency discretion, precisely because (among other things) it “involves a complicated balancing of a number of factors which are peculiarly within [the agency’s] expertise.” Chaney, 470 U.S. at 831. Indeed, the original DACA memorandum providing for the granting of deferred action expressly provided that it conferred no substantive rights. Thus, Congress has not instructed the agency to give the considerations urged by Plaintiffs any particular weight—or, indeed, any weight at all. That they did not receive conclusive weight in the final calculus, as Plaintiffs demand, is therefore no reason to disturb the Acting Secretary’s decision, especially given their futility in this context. See, e.g., Reilly, 969 F.2d at 1150.

Plaintiffs’ passing suggestion that the agency was required to conduct some sort of formal cost-benefit analysis before rescinding DACA, see Pls.’ Br. 18–19, is even farther off the mark. They cite Michigan v. EPA for the proposition that “ignoring cost, even where the relevant statutes ‘leave[] agencies with flexibility,’ constitutes arbitrary and capricious action.” Pls.’ Br. 19 (quoting Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699, 2707 (2015)). But in that case, the statute itself required consideration of costs: Congress directed the EPA to regulate power plant emissions “if [it] finds such regulation is appropriate and necessary,” 42 U.S.C. § 7412(n)(1)(A)—a phrase that the Court viewed as “an instruction to [the] … agency” to pay “at least some attention to cost[s],” Michigan, 135 S. Ct. at 2707–08. Here, by contrast, there is no such statutory directive, and thus no compulsion to transform a straightforward legal policy decision concerning enforcement of the immigration laws against unlawfully present aliens into an accounting exercise or a macro-

1 economic assessment. The agency did not perform a formal cost-benefit analysis when it adopted
 2 DACA, see DACA Memo 1–3 (AR 1–3), and one was not required by its rescission.⁴

3 C. Plaintiffs argue that the Acting Secretary failed to provide an “adequate 4 explanation” for a “reversal on policy.” Pls.’ Br. 20. Specifically, they assert that when an agency
 5 “reverses its own earlier policy, it has an even greater burden to justify its actions.” Id. (emphasis 6 added). That is not the law, as the Supreme Court squarely held in FCC v. Fox Television Stations, 7 Inc., 556 U.S. 502 (2009).

8 In Fox, the Court considered the adequacy of the FCC’s explanation for a policy change 9 barring the broadcasting of isolated expletives, which had previously been tolerated so long as 10 they were not repeated. Id. at 505. The Second Circuit had set aside the policy change under the 11 APA, reasoning that “agency action that changes prior policy” “requir[es] a more substantial 12 explanation” than when an agency acts in the first instance. Id. at 514. The Supreme Court 13 reversed, finding “no basis in the [APA] or in our opinions for a requirement that all agency 14 change be subject to more searching review” or some sort of “heightened standard.” Id. On the 15 contrary, the Court explained, when an agency changes course it “need not demonstrate to a 16 court’s satisfaction that the reasons for the new policy are better than the reasons for the old one.” 17 Id. at 515. Rather, “it suffices that the new policy is permissible under the statute, that there are 18 good reasons for it, and that the agency believes it to be better, which the conscious change of 19 course adequately indicates.” Id.

20 Here, the Acting Secretary adequately explained her rescission of the 2012 DACA 21 Memorandum. Plaintiffs do not dispute that the Rescission Policy “is permissible” under the 22 INA. Id. The Acting Secretary fully explained that there are “good reasons” for the Rescission

23
 24 ⁴ Plaintiffs likewise misread State Farm, which, contrary to their assertion, does not require an 25 analysis of “the costs as well as the benefits” of agency action irrespective of the statutory text.
 26 Pls.’ Br. 18 (quoting State Farm, 463 U.S. at 52). Indeed, if that were true, there would have been 27 no need for the Court in Michigan to parse the text of the Clean Air Act for such a directive. Cf.
 28 Michigan, 135 S. Ct. at 2707–08. Rather, in State Farm, much as in Michigan, the statute directed the agency to issue motor vehicle safety standards that were “reasonable, practicable, and appropriate,” State Farm, 463 U.S. at 33 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1392(f)(3) (repealed 1994); accordingly, the agency “look[ed] at the costs as well as the benefits” of the regulation, and the Court said merely that “[t]he agency [wa]s correct to” do so, id. at 54.

1 Policy, id., particularly given the substantial doubts about legality and litigation risk posed by the 2 proceedings in Texas and the consequent potential for massive disruption were the policy 3 immediately enjoined. And there was of course a “conscious change of course,” id., because the 4 Acting Secretary acknowledged the agency’s departure from the 2012 Memo. See supra at § I.
 5 The APA requires no more.

6 To be sure, an agency must “sometimes” provide a “more detailed justification than what 7 would suffice for a new policy created on a blank slate”—“when, for example, its new policy 8 rests upon factual findings that contradict those which underlay its prior policy; or when its prior 9 policy has engendered serious reliance interests that must be taken into account.” Fox, 556 U.S.
 10 at 515 (citation omitted). But this is not such a case. The purported “findings” that Plaintiffs 11 pluck from the DACA Memo—e.g., that “Our Nation’s immigrations laws must be enforced in a 12 strong and sensible manner,” Pls.’ Br. 21 (quoting AR 2)—are not “factual findings” at all, Fox, 13 556 U.S. at 515, but policy pronouncements. Moreover, the Acting Secretary’s justification for 14 the policy change was that controlling legal precedent had changed: after DACA was enacted, 15 DAPA and expanded DACA were invalidated by the Fifth Circuit in a decision that was affirmed 16 by an equally divided Supreme Court and that necessarily applied to DACA itself. See infra
 17 § I.D. It is difficult to think of a more compelling basis for a change in agency position.

18 This case thus bears no resemblance to Encino Motorcars, LLC v. Navarro, 136 S. Ct.
 19 2117 (2016), the only case Plaintiffs cite where an agency’s explanation for a policy change was 20 found insufficient in view of the reliance interests at stake. In Encino, the Department of Labor 21 had since 1978 interpreted the Fair Labor Standards Act not to require car dealerships to pay 22 overtime to a category of employees known as “service advisors.” Id. at 2122–24. The agency 23 reversed course in 2011, more than 30 years down the line, but “gave almost no reasons at all”
 24 for the shift. Id. at 2127. The Court declined to give Chevron deference to the agency’s new 25 interpretation, finding its explanation lacking in view of the “significant reliance interests 26 involved.” Id. at 2126. In particular, over “decades of industry reliance” on the prior policy, the 27 dealerships and their employees had “negotiated and structured their compensation plans against 28

1 th[e] background understanding” that overtime pay was not required—plans that the new policy 2 effectively upended. Id.

3 Encino is inapposite in every material respect. To begin, no similarly “longstanding”
 4 reliance interests are present here. Id. In contrast to Encino, where the abandoned policy had a 5 30-year pedigree, DACA was of recent vintage. Moreover, by its own terms, DACA made 6 deferred action available for only two-year periods, which could “be terminated at any time at the 7 agency’s discretion.” DACA Memo 2 (AR 38). And when he announced DACA in 2012, former 8 President Barack Obama explained that it was a “not a permanent fix” but a “temporary stopgap 9 measure,” and urged Congress to act “because these kids deserve to plan their lives in more than 10 two-year increments.” Remarks by President Obama on Immigration (June 15, 2012), 11 <https://go.usa.gov/xnZFY>. A prosecutorial discretion policy that can be revoked in the agency’s 12 discretion, at any time, for any reason, cannot create legally cognizable reliance interests. See 13 ECF No. 114, Defs.’ Mot. to Dismiss, at II.D, E, & G (explaining why Plaintiffs fail to state a due 14 process claim and cannot assert equitable estoppel against the government). And more 15 fundamentally, as discussed, the Acting Secretary here did not make a voluntary policy change 16 heedless of any reliance interests, but rather was impelled to act by the near-certain invalidation
 17 of DACA by the courts, such that her orderly wind-down process reasonably took into account 18 any reliance interests given the circumstances.

19 D. Plaintiffs contend that the Rescission Policy should be set aside because it “appears 20 to rely on [the] false legal premise,” set forth in “the Attorney General’s letter,” “that DACA was 21 illegal.” Pls.’ Br. 22 (capitalization omitted). This argument is mistaken for several independent 22 reasons, as Defendants have explained. See Defs.’ Mot. Dism. at 24-28.

23 To begin, the Acting Secretary did not rely on the Attorney General’s letter solely for its 24 assessment of DACA’s legality, but instead concluded that DACA “should” be wound down after 25 considering, among other things, his assessment that it was “likely” that a legal challenge to the 26 DACA Memo “would yield similar results” as the successful challenge to the DAPA Memo in 27 light of the resulting Fifth Circuit precedent. Rescission Policy 3 (AR 254). That independent 28 conclusion, based on a reasonable predictive judgment about litigation risk, is a sufficient basis to

1 sustain the Acting Secretary’s decision. See Defs.’ Mot. Dism. at 26-27. In particular, the Fifth
 2 Circuit affirmed the invalidation of not just DACA, but extended DACA; and the differences 3 between extended DACA and original DACA—the length of the deferred-action period and 4 modified age and durational requirements—are indisputably immaterial to the Fifth Circuit’s legal 5 rationale. See id. at 27-28.

6 Moreover, to the extent the Acting Secretary did rely on the proposition that DACA was 7 unlawful, this Court need not agree with that determination to uphold her decision. If an agency’s 8 legal analysis and policy judgment overlap, courts should presume an independent policy 9 judgment, even if the two determinations are arguably “intertwined.” See Syracuse Peace
 10 Council v. FCC, 867 F.2d 654, 657-59 (D.C. Cir. 1989) (if “even in the absence of constitutional 11 problems the [agency] would have reached the same outcome,” “we must end our inquiry without 12 reaching that issue”). Here, the Attorney General regarded DACA as unconstitutional in part 13 because it was an “open-ended” policy that closely tracked “proposed legislation” that Congress
 14 had repeatedly rejected. Rescission Policy 3 (AR 254). But those same concerns equally support 15 a policy judgment by the Acting Secretary that “deferred action” should “be applied only on an 16 individualized case-by-case basis” rather than used as a tool “to confer certain benefits to illegal 17 aliens that Congress had not otherwise acted to provide by law.” Id. at 2 (AR 253). This Court 18 could, therefore, sustain her decision based on a reasonable policy judgment that immigration 19 decisions of this magnitude should be left to Congress. See Defs.’ Mot. Dism. at 26-27.

20 In any event, while this Court need not decide the issue to resolve this case in favor of the 21 government on the basis that the agency decision was at least rational, the Attorney General’s 22 view that DACA was unlawful is strongly supported by the Fifth Circuit’s decision in Texas.
 23 Plaintiffs spill much ink attempting to show that “DACA was a lawful exercise of well-established 24 enforcement discretion,” Pls.’ Br. 23, repeating many of the arguments that the government 25 pressed in the Texas case, see id. at 23-25. But for better or worse, those arguments were 26 decisively rejected by the Fifth Circuit, whose decision was affirmed by an equally divided 27 Supreme Court. Thus, while Plaintiffs emphasize that, on its face, the DACA policy instructs 28 DHS officials “to exercise their discretion . . . only ‘on an individual’ and ‘case by case’ basis,”

All DACA Cases (Nos. 17-5211, 17-5235, 17-5329, 17-5380, 17-5813)
 Defendants’ Mem. In Opp. to Mot. For Provisional Relief

1 Pls.’ Br. 23–24, the Fifth Circuit found that discretion to be illusory in practice, Texas, 809 F.3d 2 at 172–73.

3 Plaintiffs offer a hodgepodge of reasons why the Court should disagree with the Fifth 4 Circuit’s decision in Texas, encouraging the Court to undertake an independent assessment of 5 DACA’s legality. Pls.’ Br. 25–27. None is persuasive.

6 First, although Texas invalidated the DAPA Memo, “not . . . the original DACA policy,” 7 id. at 25 (citation omitted), it did so based on the “important similarities” between the policies, 8 809 F.3d at 174, including through use of “evidence from DACA’s implementation” about its 9 “discretionary language,” id. at 173 (emphasis added). Though that finding had to be 10 “extrapolat[ed]” to invalidate DAPA, id., it directly dooms DACA itself. At a minimum, the 11 writing was on the wall, which is evident to any reader of the Texas opinions and the relevant 12 DHS memos. Indeed, the Texas injunction also applied to the DAPA memo’s provisions 13 expanding DACA. Plaintiffs have not pointed to any material legal distinction between the two 14 policies—because no such legal distinction exists, as discussed above.

15 Second, although this Court may not be bound by the Fifth Circuit’s opinion in Texas, see 16 Pls.’ Br. 25, that is beside the point: DHS was so bound, because it faced further litigation—in 17 the same case, before the same judge, bound by the same circuit precedent—over a materially 18 indistinguishable policy that was thus almost certain to be invalidated.

19 Third, Plaintiffs argue that the government’s briefs in Texas and elsewhere are “more 20 persuasive” than the Texas decision itself. Pls.’ Br. 25. That, too, is beside the point: Those 21 arguments were firmly rejected by a Fifth Circuit opinion that was affirmed by an equally divided 22 Supreme Court, and the government, having exhausted its appeal options, was bound to respect 23 that decision given the absence of any plausible prospect of a different result in the impending
 24 litigation. The same is true of the OLC’s “preliminary view” that the proposed version of DACA 25 would be lawful. Id. That “preliminary” conclusion was conditioned on the proviso that “it was 26 critical that . . . the DACA program require immigration officials to evaluate each application for 27 deferred action on a case-by-case basis.” OLC Op. 18 n.8 (AR 21). Yet the Fifth Circuit found 28 that DHS officials did not “genuinely” retain such discretion in practice. Texas, 809 F.3d at 176.

1 Fourth, Plaintiffs claim that “Texas is distinguishable” because, while “[t]he Fifth Circuit
 2 found that DAPA was not actually discretionary,” the “same cannot be said for DACA.” Pls.’ Br.
 3 26. But that is exactly what the Fifth Circuit said about DACA: “Like the DAPA Memo, the 4 DACA Memo instructed agencies to review applications on a case-by-case basis,” and thus 5 “facially purport[ed] to confer discretion,” Texas, 809 F.3d at 171–72; nevertheless, “there was 6 evidence from DACA’s implementation that [this] discretionary language was pretextual,” id. at 7 173.

8 Fifth, Plaintiffs argue that the Fifth Circuit “invalid[ly]” concluded that the low denial rate 9 for DACA requests meant that any discretion afforded to DHS officials was illusory. Pls.’ Br.
 10 26. In particular, they point to a declaration submitted by the agency in Texas asserting that 11 DACA was, in fact, a “case-specific process” under which there were “several instances of 12 discretionary denials.” Id. at 27 (quoting Texas, 809 F.3d at 175) (citing Decl. of Donald 13 Neufeld)). Once again, this is an argument that the government pressed, but the Fifth Circuit 14 rejected: After quoting the same assertions, the court concluded that “those denials were not 15 discretionary” at all, “but instead were required because of failures to meet DACA’s objective 16 criteria.” Texas, 809 F.3d at 175 n.140; see also id. at 172 n.130.

17 Changing gears, Plaintiffs contend that “purported ‘litigation risk’ cannot justify the 18 rescission” because it is a “post hoc explanation” that, in any event, “is not a sufficient reason for 19 the federal government to do anything.” Pls.’ Br. 27–28 (capitalization omitted). They are wrong 20 on both counts.

21 To begin, the notion that “litigation risk” is nothing but an after-the-fact rationalization 22 for the Rescission Policy is squarely refuted by the record. The Policy itself discusses the adverse 23 rulings from the Fifth Circuit and Supreme Court with respect to DAPA; the similarities between 24 DAPA and DACA; Texas’s threat to amend its complaint to challenge DACA; the Attorney 25 General’s view that “it is likely that potentially imminent litigation would yield similar results 26 with respect to DACA,” and the Acting Secretary’s decision after considering all this that she 27 “should” (not “must”) wind-down DACA. Rescission Policy 3–4 (AR 254–55) (citation omitted).
 28 Likewise, her contemporaneous statement noted that her decision was prompted by “recent

1 litigation” that threatened to “allow the judiciary to potentially shut the program down completely 2 and immediately.” Duke Statement. Plaintiffs’ suggestion otherwise is specious.

3 Plaintiffs’ contention that it is irrational for litigation risk to inform an agency’s 4 decisionmaking is equally mistaken. The Supreme Court’s decision in Ricci v. DeStefano, 557 5 U.S. 557 (2009), provides a useful comparison. There, a city government had to decide whether 6 to certify the results of a promotional exam for firefighters that had a disparate impact on minority 7 applicants. Id. at 562. The city faced potential litigation either way: If it certified the results, 8 minority applicants threatened to bring a disparate impact lawsuit under Title VII; if it refused, 9 applicants who would have been promoted threatened to bring a disparate treatment lawsuit. Id.
 10 at 562–63. Reconciling these competing obligations, the Court held that the city could rescind 11 the test results—and thereby engage in “intentional discrimination”—so long as it had a “strong 12 basis in evidence to believe it will be subject to disparate-impact liability if it fails” to do so. Id.
 13 at 585.

14 If it is permissible to make race-conscious employment decisions based on serious 15 litigation risk, then surely it is not irrational for an agency to consider litigation risk when making 16 discretionary policy decisions, let alone a decision to wind-down a non-enforcement policy that 17 conferred no rights on anyone. And here, there was far more than a “strong basis” for the Acting 18 Secretary to believe that continuing to administer DACA would subject the agency to liability, 19 particularly given the adverse precedent in the Fifth Circuit that was directly on point.

20 The cases that Plaintiffs cite are not to the contrary: None deals with circumstances 21 comparable to those presented here, where the agency explained that binding precedent 22 effectively made the outcome of further litigation in the same court preordained. In Sierra Club
 23 v. Jackson, 833 F. Supp. 2d 11 (D.D.C. 2012) (cited at Pls.’ Br. 28), for example, the court rejected 24 the agency’s reliance on “litigation risk” because the decision on review made “no mention” of 25 that rationale, and the administrative record “belie[d] EPA’s purported concern” on that score.
 26 Id. at 34. In International Union, United Mine Workers of America v. U.S. Department of Labor, 27 358 F.3d 40 (D.C. Cir. 2004), the court recognized that an adverse out-of-circuit precedent was 28 “indeed a caution” for the agency, but found the agency’s explanation insufficient because it

1 referred only to the “possible adverse effect” of the decision without “explain[ing] why it came 2 to deem the . . . decision fatal” to its policy. Id. at 44.⁵ And in Organized Village of Kake v. U.S.
 3 Department of Agriculture, 795 F.3d 956 (9th Cir. 2015) (en banc), the court dismissed as 4 “implausible” the agency’s explanation that the challenged rule—which exempted one national 5 forest from certain construction and logging restrictions—would “reduce[] the potential for 6 conflicts” in other lawsuits, given that those “lawsuits involved forests other than the Tongass, so 7 it is impossible to discern how an exemption for the Alaska forest would affect them.” Id. at 969– 8 70. This case did not, as Plaintiffs claim, hold that an “agency’s desire to avoid litigation did not 9 satisfy its obligation to provide a reasoned explanation for its change in policy,” Pls.’ Br. 28, and 10 their reliance on that case is entirely misplaced.

11 This case also presents no threat of an “end-run around the APA.” Pls.’ Br. 28. Unlike in 12 Mexichem Specialty Resins, Inc. v. EPA, 787 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2015), here the agency has not 13 attempted to “circumvent the rulemaking process”—which was not required in any event—14 “through litigation concessions.” Id. at 557. On the contrary, the agency vigorously litigated a 15 materially indistinguishable policy all the way up to the Supreme Court. Having lost that battle, 16 however, the agency reasonably recognized that a challenge to DACA would in all likelihood 17 meet the same fate. Far from end-running the APA, the Acting Secretary has declined to frontally 18 assault the courts. That is commendable, not irrational.

19 E. As a last gasp, Plaintiffs suggest that the Rescission Policy should be set aside 20 because the rationale supporting it was “pretextual.” Pls.’ Br. 29. They contend that the agency’s 21 supposedly “shifting” or “conflicting” explanations for the Policy reveal the “true reason” for its 22 adoption: to encourage Congress to enact legislation addressing this and other immigration 23 issues. Id. at 29–30. This theory is flawed from start to finish.

24 1. To begin, Plaintiffs’ attempts to rely on material outside the administrative record as 25 evidence of pretext should be rejected. As the Supreme Court has repeatedly explained, when 26 there is a “contemporaneous explanation” for an agency’s decision, its validity “must . . . stand or

27
 28⁵ California ex rel. Lockyer v. U.S. Dep’t of Agriculture, 459 F. Supp. 2d 874, 904 (N.D. Cal.
 2006) (cited at Pls.’ Br. 28), cites International Union in passing, but offers no relevant analysis.

fall on the propriety of that finding.” Camp v. Pitts, 411 U.S. 138, 143 (1973). “The task of the reviewing court is to apply the appropriate APA standard of review to the agency decision based on the record the agency presents to the reviewing court,” Florida Power & Light Co. v. Lorion, 470 U.S. 729, 743-44 (1985) (citation omitted), “not some new record made initially in the reviewing court.” Camp, 411 U.S. at 142. Plaintiffs cannot rely on material outside the administrative record to argue that an agency acted arbitrarily and capriciously any more than an agency can rely on post-hoc rationalizations to defend the rationality of its actions, see SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 94 (1943). Because Plaintiffs’ request for provisional relief is premised solely on their APA claims, their attempt to rely on deposition transcripts and other extra-record material should be rejected.

2. Critically, Plaintiffs identify no actual shift in the Acting Secretary’s stated justification for the Rescission Policy. None of the supposedly “shifting” statements are from the Acting Secretary herself—the only official vested with authority under the INA to make the decision at issue. 8 U.S.C. § 1103(a)(1). Plaintiffs have therefore failed to show that the Acting Secretary’s reasons for adopting the Rescission Policy are pretextual.

Plaintiffs submit that the Acting Secretary could not have been concerned about DACA’s legality because, rather than end DACA immediately, she allowed it to gradually sunset. Pls.’ Br. 29–30. But, as explained above, the orderly wind-down of DACA is an appropriate response to the litigation risk facing the government as well as the reliance interests at stake (and the agency’s own operational needs). In any event, it is difficult to see how this argument helps Plaintiffs: If the Court were to deem the wind-down itself illegal, the solution would not be to extend DACA indefinitely, but to end it immediately. And in any event, Plaintiffs point to no legal authority for the proposition that either the Constitution or the APA forbid an orderly wind-down of a program in the face of concerns about its legality.

Plaintiffs similarly claim to see inconsistency between the Acting Secretary’s reliance on litigation risk and Defendants’ argument that the decision is not reviewable under the APA because, “if defendants really believed that the Texas decision presented an unmanageable litigation risk, they also must believe that the Texas decision correctly held that a program like

1 DACA is reviewable and that the notice-and-comment requirement applies.” Pls.’ Br. 30. This 2 is nonsensical. The Fifth Circuit’s decision in Texas was upheld by an equally divided Supreme 3 Court, and the Acting Secretary therefore agreed with the Attorney General’s conclusion that the 4 impending challenge to DACA in the same case would likely prove successful—a decision which 5 is eminently rational whether or not she personally agreed with the Fifth Circuit’s justiciability
 6 determination. Notably, neither the Acting Secretary’s memo nor the Attorney General’s letter 7 expressly relied upon or gave any indication that they agreed with the Fifth Circuit’s justiciability
 8 rulings, as opposed to its merits rulings. There is no inconsistency here.

9 Finally, because there is no basis, let alone a strong one, to conclude that the Acting 10 Secretary did not actually believe and rest on her reasonable concerns about DACA’s legality, it 11 would be entirely permissible even if plaintiffs were correct that she had the additional motive of 12 wishing to encourage Congress to enact legislation addressing the legal status of DACA 13 recipients, Pls.’ Br. 30. While Plaintiffs describe this “administrat[ive] legislative strategy” as a 14 “cynical ploy,” id., it is in fact a legitimate policy goal that has been shared across 15 administrations. When the President announced DACA in 2012, he said, “Precisely because this 16 is temporary, Congress needs to act,” and he called on it “to pass the DREAM Act.” Barack 17 Obama, The White House, Remarks by the President on Immigration, supra at § I.C. When the 18 former Secretary expanded DACA in 2014, he noted that the policy created no “immigration 19 status or pathway to citizenship. Only an Act of Congress can confer these rights.” DAPA Memo 20 5 (AR 41). Thus, the Acting Secretary was in good company when, in announcing the Rescission 21 Policy, she “urge[d] Congress to use its Constitutional authority to ... find a legislative 22 solution.” Duke Statement. The Acting Secretary’s desire for a “legislative solution” mirrors 23 President Trump’s goal that Congress “legalize DACA” and adopt “legislation addressing the 24 status of [DACA] recipients.” See Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump), Twitter (Sept. 5, 2017,

 Defendants’ Mem. In Opp. to Mot. For Provisional Relief

1 There is nothing at all inappropriate about those suggestions, nor are they inconsistent with the 2 Rescission Memo itself, which plainly rests on the conclusion that any policy of deferred action 3 on the scale of DACA should be enacted by Congress.

4 3. Plaintiffs' reliance on statements by officials other than the Acting Secretary is even 5 further afield. That other officials might have supported the Rescission Policy for different 6 reasons does not indicate that the reasons given by the actual decisionmaker—the Acting 7 Secretary—were pretextual.

8 Moreover, even if statements of officials other than the decisionmaker were relevant, none 9 plausibly gives rise to a cognizable inference of pretext here. Plaintiffs suggest, for example, that 10 the Acting Secretary's assessment of litigation risk with respect to DACA was a pretense because, 11 at one deposition, when asked whether there is "any [DHS] policy on how to deal with threats to 12 sue by state or local officials," one of her advisors responded: "[T]hat sounds like the craziest 13 policy you could ever have" because "[y]ou could never do anything if you were always worried 14 about being sued."⁶ App'x in Supp. of Pls.' Mot. for Prov. Relief (Pls.' App'x) 1929, ECF Nos.
 15 113, 117–19, 121, 124 (Hamilton Dep.) (cited at Pls.' Br. 30). But Plaintiffs rip that statement 16 out of context: read in conjunction with the broader discussion, it is clear that the deponent was 17 responding to the question whether DHS has a general policy of considering "litigation risk" in 18 the context of each agency decision—something the agency has never claimed and that might 19 make little sense. Regardless, whatever the merits of such a policy as a general matter might be 20 (or whether the agency has any such policy), that says nothing about how DHS might choose to 21 address litigation risk in a particular case, especially where, as here, there was controlling adverse 22 precedent and the consequent potential for massive disruption flowing from an abrupt (and highly 23 likely) court-ordered termination. Plaintiffs' reliance on this isolated, off-hand comment as 24 supposed "evidence" of pretext is misplaced.

25 Plaintiffs next cast aspersions on the President's tweet indicating that, if Congress "can't" 26 pass a legislative fix for DACA recipients, he "will revisit the issue!" Donald J. Trump

27 ⁶ Although Plaintiffs refer to this official as the "author" of the Rescission Memo, Pls.' Br. 3, this 28 only further confirms their failure to understand administrative law. Mr. Hamilton is no more the "author" of the Acting Secretary's memo than is a law clerk author of a judicial opinion.

1 (@realDonaldTrump), Twitter (Sept. 5, 2017, 5:38 p.m), supra at 27. But that comment is fully 2 consistent with the President’s clearly stated view that “the program is unlawful and 3 unconstitutional and cannot be successfully defended in court.” See Statement from President
 4 Trump, Sep. 5, 2017, <https://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2017/09/05/statement-president-donald-j-trump>. Far from undercutting the Acting Secretary’s rationale for rescinding
 5 the policy, the comment emphasized the need for legislative action and expressed the President’s 6 intention to revisit Administration policies on childhood arrivals—not the legality and 7 defensibility of the DACA program—if Congress did not timely act. That stated intention simply 8 reflects the government’s obligation to “consider … the wisdom of its policy on a continuing 9 basis, for example, in response to changed factual circumstances, or a change in administrations.” 10 Nat’l Cable & Telecomms. Ass’n v. Brand X Internet Servs., 545 U.S. 967, 981 (2005) (internal 11 citation omitted).⁷

13 4. More fundamentally, Plaintiffs fall far short of making the “strong showing of bad faith or 14 improper behavior” necessary to overcome the presumption of regularity. Overton Park, 401 15 U.S. at 420. To do so, they “must make a significant showing—variously described as a ‘strong,’ 16 ‘substantial,’ or ‘prima facie’ showing … indicative of bad faith.” Amfac Resorts LLC v. Dep’t 17 of Interior, 143 F. Supp. 2d 7, 12 (D.D.C. 2001). They cannot meet this burden with “vague”
 18 allegations, Coal. on Sensible Transp. v. Dole, 826 F.2d 60, 72 (D.C. Cir. 1987), “conclusory 19 statements,” James Madison Ltd. v. Ludwig, 82 F.3d 1085, 1095 (D.C. Cir. 1996), or 20 “inadmissible hearsay,” Commercial Drapery Contractors v. United States, 133 F.3d 1, 7 (D.C.
 21 Cir. 1998). Rather, they must proffer “serious, nonconclusory allegation[s] of bad faith” or 22 “independent evidence of improper conduct.” Coal. on Sensible Transp., 826 F.2d at 72. Indeed, 23 Plaintiffs “must present ‘well-nigh irrefragable proof’ of bad faith or bias on the part of 24 7 Plaintiffs grasp at straws by claiming that the government’s briefs support their theory of 25 pretext. Notwithstanding their insistence that the “motion to dismiss filed by the government in 26 Batalla Vidal makes no argument that DACA was effectuated without statutory authority or was 27 an unconstitutional exercise of authority, but relies instead on the ‘litigation risk’ justification,” 28 the government’s motions to dismiss on both coasts argue that “the Attorney General’s view that DACA was unlawful is strongly supported by the Fifth Circuit’s decision in Texas that was affirmed by the Supreme Court.” See Defs. Mot. to Dism. § II.A; Defs.’ Mot. to Dismiss, Batalla

Vidal v. Donald J. Trump, No. 16-cv-4756 (E.D.N.Y. Oct. 27, 2017), ECF 95-1.

1 governmental officials” to overcome the presumption that the agency discharged its duties in good
 2 faith. Adair v. England, 183 F. Supp. 2d 31, 60 (D.D.C. 2002) (citations omitted). Plaintiffs fail 3 to meet this high burden, as none of the statements to which they point even arguably 4 demonstrates bad faith. In sum, even if generously interpreted, at most the statements invoked by 5 Plaintiffs show that various officials other than the actual decisionmaker may not have fully 6 agreed with all the reasons that the Acting Secretary articulated for her decision. That 7 different officials may have different perspectives on these issues may show disagreement, but it 8 is no sign of bad faith, let alone strong evidence of it.

9 II. The Rescission Is a General Statement of Policy Not Subject To Notice-And- 10 Comment Rulemaking Requirements

11 Plaintiffs also cannot succeed in arguing that DHS was required to “abide by the full 12 panoply of APA procedures including notice and comment,” Pls.’ Br. 31, before rescinding the 13 DACA policy. The APA generally requires an agency to follow notice-and-comment procedures 14 before promulgating rules. 5 U.S.C. § 553(b), (c); Perez v. Mortg. Bankers Ass’n, 135 S. Ct.
 15 1199, 1203 (2015). But the APA exempts “general statements of policy” from that requirement 16 unless another statute provides otherwise, 5 U.S.C. § 553(b)(3)(A), and none does here. The 17 Rescission Policy is exempt from the APA’s notice-and-comment requirements because it is a 18 general statement of policy regarding how DHS will exercise its enforcement discretion under the 19 INA. In attempting to recast the Rescission as a substantive rule, as opposed to a policy guidance, 20 Plaintiffs fundamentally mischaracterize both the nature of the Rescission and its effect on the 21 availability of deferred action. And in any event, Plaintiffs’ argument is foreclosed by controlling 22 Ninth Circuit precedent construing INS deferred-action directives as policy statements exempt 23 from notice and comment.

24 1. General statements of policy “advise the public prospectively of the manner in which 25 the agency proposes to exercise a discretionary power.” Lincoln, 508 U.S. at 197 (quoting Dep’t 26 of Justice, Attorney General’s Manual on the APA 30 n.3 (1947)). They “serve a dual purpose”: 27 both to “inform[] the public concerning the agency’s future plans and priorities for exercising its 28 discretionary power,” as well as to “‘educate’ and provide direction to the agency’s personnel in

All DACA Cases (Nos. 17-5211, 17-5235, 17-5329, 17-5380, 17-5813)
 Defendants’ Mem. In Opp. to Mot. For Provisional Relief

1 the field, who are required to implement ... policies and exercise ... discretionary power in 2 specific cases.” Mada-Luna v. Fitzpatrick, 813 F.2d 1006, 1013 (9th Cir. 1987). And a “general 3 statement of policy, like a press release,” often “announces the course which the agency intends 4 to follow in future adjudications.” Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. FPC, 506 F.2d 33, 38 (D.C. Cir.
 5 1974).

6 By contrast, legislative rules adopted through notice-and-comment procedures have the 7 force and effect of law, and thus create legally-enforceable rights or obligations in regulated 8 parties. Perez, 135 S. Ct. at 1203; Chrysler Corp. v. Brown, 441 U.S. 281, 302–03 (1979). In 9 other words, an “agency action that ... would be the basis for an enforcement action for violations 10 of those obligations or requirements—is a legislative rule.” Nat'l Mining Ass'n v. McCarthy, 758 11 F.3d 243, 251 (D.C. Cir. 2014). The APA leaves to the agency the choice of which mode to 12 employ. See 5 U.S.C. § 553(b). If an agency chooses to issue a statement of policy rather than a 13 legislative rule through notice-and-comment rulemaking, that choice has consequences: The 14 agency’s statements in the policy have “no binding effect on members of the public or on courts.”
 15 Richard J. Pierce, Jr., Administrative Law Treatise § 6.3, at 419 (5th ed. 2010).

16 A quintessential use of policy statements is for an agency to announce how and when it
 17 will pursue (or forbear from) enforcement, in the exercise of its discretion. Such enforcement 18 policies explain how the agency intends to exercise a power that is “generally committed to an 19 agency’s absolute discretion.” Chaney, 470 U.S. at 831. Unlike legislative rules adopted after 20 notice-and-comment, such enforcement policies do not establish or alter any legally-enforceable 21 rights or obligations of third parties. And such policies can readily be changed, in response to 22 changing circumstances, funding, and priorities.

23 Applying these principles, the Rescission Policy can only be viewed as a general statement
 24 of policy. Indeed, DHS and its predecessor, the INS, have exercised their enforcement discretion 25 through the use of deferred action and similar policies dozens of times over more than half a 26 century, without following notice-and-comment procedures. See Andorra Bruno et al., Analysis 27 of June 15, 2012 DHS Memorandum, Exercising Prosecutorial Discretion with Respect to 28 Individuals Who Came to the United States as Children 20-23, Cong. Research Serv. (July 13,

1 2012), <https://edsource.org/wp-content/uploads/old/Deferred-Action-Congressional-Research->
 2 Service-Report1.pdf. Plaintiffs provide no meritorious reason for treating the Rescission Policy 3 differently.

4 The text of the Rescission reinforces the point again and again. It is a “memorandum.”
 5 Rescission Policy at 1 (AR 252). The Acting Secretary issued it as an “exercise of [her] authority 6 in establishing national immigration policies and priorities.” Rescission Policy 4 (AR 255). It 7 instructs DHS personnel on the manner in which they are to exercise the agency’s discretionary 8 enforcement authority on a prospective basis. See Noel v. Chapman, 508 F.2d 1023, 1030 (2d 9 Cir. 1975) (“[G]eneral statements of policy are rules directed primarily at the staff of an agency 10 describing how it will conduct agency discretionar[y] functions, while other rules [i.e., legislative 11 rules] are directed primarily at the public in an effort to impose obligations on them.”) (internal 12 citation omitted; emphasis added). The Policy does not act to immediately deprive any current 13 DACA recipients of their deferred-action status, but describes how pending and future requests 14 will be “adjudicate[d]—on an individual, case-by-case basis.” Rescission Policy 4 (AR 255). It 15 acknowledges the settled principle, recognized by both Congress and the courts, that deferred 16 action is “an act of prosecutorial discretion” that may be exercised “on an individualized case-by-17 case basis,” id. at 2 (AR 253), and that places “no limitations” on the agency’s exercise of such 18 “otherwise lawful enforcement … prerogatives,” id. at 5 (AR 256). It “does not … create any 19 right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by any party.” Id. And no alien 20 has an enforceable right to obtain deferred action under DACA or any other policy regardless.
 21 See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(g); AADC, 525 U.S. at 485. Deferred action “remains discretionary and 22 reversible,” Arpaio, 797 F.3d at 17—as it has been through each of the previous policies adopted 23 without “cumbersome and time-consuming rulemaking proceedings.” Nat'l Ass'n of Regulatory 24 Util. Comm'r's v. U.S. Dep't of Energy, 851 F.2d 1424, 1430 (D.C. Cir. 1988).

25 Plaintiffs’ attempt to portray the Rescission policy as a substantive rule is unpersuasive.
 26 Plaintiffs contend that there “can be no dispute that DHS intends to be bound by the Rescission, 27 and that the Rescission limits the agency’s discretion,” because, they insist, it is “a categorical 28 rule barring DACA recipients from renewing their grants of deferred action and precluding new

1 potential DACA recipients from obtaining deferred action.” Pls.’ Br. 32-33. This 2 mischaracterizes the nature of the DACA Rescission and the availability of deferred action
 3 generally. Deferred action was available on a discretionary basis before the DACA policy (albeit 4 on a more limited and case-specific basis), and it remains available today. DACA is not the only 5 manner by which individuals obtain deferred action, as the long history of similar policies evinces.
 6 That a particular policy permitting a class of individuals to seek deferred action based on certain 7 criteria has been rescinded does not mean that DHS officials are “flatly prohibited,” id. at 32, 8 from later extending that status on an individualized basis to persons regardless of if they are 9 former DACA recipients, and nothing in the Rescission Policy indicates otherwise. To the 10 contrary, nothing in the Rescission Policy prevents DHS officials from later exercising their 11 delegated discretion to confer deferred action on an individual former DACA recipient, or even 12 upon large groups of former DACA recipients under appropriate individualized criteria. The 13 Secretary remains free to establish (or revoke) other deferred-action policies, in her discretion; to 14 grant (or deny) deferred action as to any individual under other policies, or no policy at all, in her 15 discretion; to revoke a grant of deferred action, in her discretion; and to pursue removal, in her 16 discretion. In short, the Rescission Policy does not bind regulated parties or the courts in any 17 way. Indeed, DACA itself was indisputably adopted as an exercise of enforcement discretion, 18 and it follows that its rescission was too.

19 Plaintiffs’ argument that the Rescission is a substantive rule because it “bans DACA 20 recipients from applying for and traveling on advance parole” is similarly flawed. Id. at 31. The 21 possible availability of advance parole, under separate regulations not otherwise at issue in this 22 case, is a discretionary consequence of receiving deferred action—meaning that it is an aspect of 23 the Secretary’s authority under the INA. Accordingly, the Secretary may use statements of policy 24 to “advise the public prospectively of the manner in which [DHS] proposes to exercise [its] 25 discretionary power” concerning deferred action, as well as the consequences that follow from 26 that exercise due to separate regulations. See Vigil, 508 U.S. at 197 (citations omitted). The 27 Rescission Policy announced a prospective change instructing the agency to discontinue 28 processing applications for advance parole “under standards associated with the DACA

1 program.” Rescission Policy 4, (AR 255). The Secretary acted well within her discretion in 2 changing this policy without the full notice-and-comment process.

3 Plaintiffs even attempt to argue that only the Rescission, and not the 2012 DACA 4 Memorandum, required notice and comment. According to Plaintiffs, “it is irrelevant that the 5 2012 DACA Memorandum did not go through the notice-and-comment process” because “DACA 6 was an exercise of prosecutorial discretion and not required to go through notice and comment,” 7 while “the Rescission does not present itself as an exercise of DHS’s discretion, and in fact 8 prohibits the exercise of discretion in the adjudication of applications for deferred action.” Pls.’
 9 Br. 33. That cannot be. As established above, DHS officials retain the discretion to grant deferred 10 action outside the confines of the DACA policy. But more fundamentally, prosecutorial 11 discretion cannot be a one-way valve whereby the Secretary is free to expand the availability of 12 deferred action through a statement policy, but, once the policy is announced, may not restrict it 13 without a cumbersome rulemaking proceeding. That is not the law, and tellingly, Plaintiffs cite 14 no authority for the remarkable proposition that the notice-and-comment inquiry differs 15 depending on whether an agency is broadening or limiting access to a discretionary program. See 16 Pls.’ Br. 31–34. Plaintiffs’ argument is nonsensical for the additional reason that, if winding 17 down the DACA policy is a “substantive rule,” then a fortiori so was enacting the policy in the 18 first place. Since the DACA Memo itself was not adopted through notice and comment, on 19 Plaintiffs’ own theory it would be void ab initio—leaving Plaintiffs without a remedy.

20 Moreover, it is common for senior prosecutors to set bright-line policies directing the 21 exercise of discretion by individual prosecutors. For example, the “passive enforcement policy” 22 adopted by the Attorney General and approved in Wayte v. United States, 470 U.S. 598, 601–02, 23 613 (1985), limited the discretion of prosecutors to pursue charges against those who had not self-24 reported their violation of the law. And earlier this year the Attorney General issued a 25 memorandum instructing all federal prosecutors to “charge and pursue the most serious, readily 26 provable offense” in all federal criminal prosecutions, expressly rescinding two earlier, more 27 lenient policies. See Memorandum from the Attorney General to All Federal Prosecutors (May 28 10, 2017), <https://www.justice.gov/opa/press-release/file/965896/download>. If enforcement

1 policies lacking an additional layer of case-specific discretion triggered notice-and-comment 2 requirements, such policies would be unlawful.

3 2. In arguing that the Rescission was required to undergo notice-and-comment
 4 rulemaking, Plaintiffs elide binding Ninth Circuit precedent that squarely rejected a contention
 5 that an INS deferred-action directive was void for failure to abide by notice-and-comment
 6 requirements. The petitioner in Mada-Luna, 813 F.2d at 1009, challenged the validity of an INS 7 Operating Instruction (i.e., guidelines for the exercise of discretion in considering requests for 8 deferred action) under which his deferred-action application had been denied. Mada-Luna argued 9 that the Operating Instruction, which purported to rescind an earlier directive, was “invalid 10 because the INS promulgated it without the notice-and-comment procedures required” by the 11 APA, and that the agency was thus required to review his application under the “more ‘generous’ 12 standard” contained in the earlier guidance. Id. After thorough consideration of the distinctions 13 between a substantive rule and a general policy statement, the court held the Operating Instruction 14 to be “a clear[] case of a general statement of policy.” Id. at 1017. The Ninth Circuit expressly 15 rejected the argument that, “if the repeal of an agency directive will cause a ‘substantial impact’ 16 to the rights of a specific class it cannot be exempt from section 553’s notice-and-comment 17 requirements,” and explained that the proper inquiry “focuse[s] upon the effect of the regulation 18 or directive upon agency decisionmaking, not the public at large.” Id. at 1016.

19 Like the Operating Instructions challenged in Mada-Luna, the Rescission Policy is a 20 prospective instruction guiding DHS officials in their exercise of discretion. That deferred action 21 may be available on a more limited basis than under DACA does not change the fact that the 22 Rescission is an internal directive about how to handle prosecutorial discretion and thus does not 23 have the force and effect of law. It is thus a “clear[] case of a general statement of policy,” id. at 24 1017, not subject to notice and comment. See also Romeiro de Silva v. Smith, 773 F.2d 1021, 25 1025 (9th Cir. 1985) (“INS operations instructions fall within section 553(b)(A)’s exception 26 because the instructions are internal directives not having the force and effect of law,” which bind 27 the agency “so long as they remain operative, but [the agency] may repeal them and substitute 28

1 new rules in their place.”).

2 Plaintiffs ignore Mada-Luna’s holding while hinging their procedural APA claim on a 3 single, out-of-circuit district court case, United States ex rel. Parco v. Morris, 426 F. Supp. 976, 4 984–86 (E.D. Pa. 1977), which they depict as “strikingly similar”—despite that the case arose in 5 the very different context of a habeas corpus petition challenging the refusal to extend an 6 individual’s voluntary departure privilege. Pls.’ Br. 33–34. The Parco court, relying on an 7 unusual stipulation by a government official that the petitioner’s application would have been 8 approved but for a recent change to an INS Operating Instruction, determined that the petitioner
 9 “was entitled to advance notice and an opportunity to comment on the proposed change.” Parco, 10 426 F. Supp. at 985. Parco is inapplicable to the broad policy change at issue here and 11 unpersuasive.

12 THE REMAINING FACTORS WEIGH AGAINST PRELIMINARY RELIEF

13 Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that they are likely to succeed on the merits. That, 14 alone, should doom their request for preliminary injunctive relief. See Am. Trucking Ass’ns, 559 15 F.3d at 1052. Nonetheless, as set forth below, Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate how a preliminary 16 injunction will cure any harm that Plaintiffs claim they will suffer. Nor do Plaintiffs demonstrate 17 that the balance of the equities or the public interest tips in their favor. For these reasons as well, 18 Plaintiffs’ motion should be denied.

19 III. Plaintiffs Have Not Shown Any Risk of Irreparable Harm Absent 20 Preliminary Relief

21 Provisional relief serves the “limited purpose” of “preserv[ing] the relative positions of the 22 parties until a trial on the merits can be held.” Univ. of Tex. v. Camenisch, 451 U.S. 390, 395 23 (1981). Accordingly, “[a]n essential prerequisite” before granting provisional relief “is a showing 24 of irreparable injury to the moving party in its absence.” Dollar Rent A Car of Wash., Inc. v.
Travelers Indem. Co., 774 F.2d 1371, 1375 (9th Cir. 1985).

25 Not just any showing of irreparable harm will suffice. A party “is only entitled to an 26 injunction that prevents [the] irreparable harm” that is “likely to occur.” S. Yuba River Citizens League v. Nat’l Marine Fisheries Serv., 804 F. Supp. 2d 1045, 1054 (E.D. Cal. 2011); see also id.

1 (noting that a party's "showing [of irreparable harm] is required in order to justify the specific 2 measures that [the party] request[s]"); Seto v. Thielen, No. CIV. 10-00351, 2010 WL 2612603, at 3 *3 (D. Haw. June 28, 2010) (a movant "should tailor the [injunctive] relief requested to appropriate 4 relief for the alleged violation"). Thus, courts regularly deny requests for provisional relief where 5 the requested injunction would not remedy the irreparable harm alleged by the movant during the 6 period in which the requested injunction would apply. See Taiebat v. Scialabba, No. 2017 WL 7 747460, at *5 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 27, 2017) (denying preliminary injunction where "plaintiff [could 8 not] establish that the mandatory injunction he seeks would address the alleged harm"); S. Yuba 9 River Citizens League, 804 F. Supp. 2d at 1057 ("[T]he court declines to order an interim measure 10 that will provide no benefit to the listed species in the interim period."); Schroll v. Plunkett, 760 11 F. Supp. 1378, 1384 (D. Or. 1990) ("Granting plaintiffs' requested injunctive relief would not 12 prevent the alleged" harm).

13 Plaintiffs fail to make a sufficient showing of irreparable harm to justify the injunctive 14 relief they request. The Court has made clear its intention to render a decision on the merits of 15 Plaintiffs' claims by March 5, 2018, when the DACA Policy begins to wind down. See Order re 16 Motion to Complete AR 2, ECF No. 79; see also Continuance for Augmented AR & Stay of Disc.
 17 2, ECF No. 193-1. Accordingly, Plaintiffs must demonstrate that the provisional relief they request 18 will remedy irreparable harm that is likely to occur during the interim period between now and 19 that date. See, e.g., S. Yuba River Citizens League, 804 F. Supp. 2d at 1057.

20 For two related reasons, Plaintiffs have not done so. First, the bulk of Plaintiffs' factual 21 support pertains generally to the alleged impact of DHS's rescission of DACA writ large and 22 provides little to no explanation for why irreparable harm is likely to occur between now and 23 March 5, 2018. This includes Plaintiffs' declarations discussing research studies that explore the 24 psychological and emotional impact of DACA's rescission on current recipients, see, e.g., Pls.'
 25 App'x 368 (a "repeal of DACA would have disastrous consequences"), as well as declarations
 26 from current DACA recipients describing that impact in their own words, see, e.g., id. at 401
 27 ("[DACA's] rescission has stripped me of [a] sense of security."). It also includes declarations 28 estimating the financial impact that rescinding DACA will have on federal, state, and local

1 economies and governments, which utilize twelve-month and ten-year-based calculations. See id.
 2 at 73, 224. The same is also true of the declarations identifying potential harms to local 3 communities. See id. at 1138 (“[S]ince the rescission of DACA ... [people are] decreasing their 4 involvement in civic life.”).

5 These and other attestations do not aid Plaintiffs in carrying their burden of establishing 6 that irreparable harm is likely to occur prior to March 5, 2018. Indeed, such harms could not be 7 remedied by a preliminary injunction. The requested injunction would provide only temporary, 8 short-term relief, and would dissolve upon the conclusion of these lawsuits. U.S. Philips Corp. v.
 9 KBC Bank N.V., 590 F.3d 1091, 1093 (9th Cir. 2010). Indeed, only a permanent legislative fix 10 would provide DACA recipients with the security they seek. But even if this Court could fashion 11 some form of permanent relief, Plaintiffs are not seeking it now, and in any event, they have not 12 shown that such relief is warranted at this time. See Senate of Cal. v. Mosbacher, 968 F.2d 974, 13 978 (9th Cir. 1992) (“[A] judgment on the merits in the guise of preliminary relief is a highly 14 inappropriate result.”).

15 Second, even where Plaintiffs’ declarations identify concrete harm, they nonetheless fail 16 to establish that the harm is likely to occur in the interim period between now and March 5, 2018, 17 or that the injunctive relief they request will remedy such harm. For example, Plaintiffs argue that 18 many declarants will lose opportunities to pursue their chosen profession as a result of their 19 inability to make long-term family, educational, and career decisions, such as whether to pursue a 20 medical residency. Pls.’ Br. at 34. As above, however, those individuals’ ability to confidently 21 engage in such planning would only be safeguarded through legislative action or some other sort 22 of permanent relief, and not through a grant of injunctive relief through March 5, 2018.⁸ Moreover,
 23 such relief would be unnecessary for many of Plaintiffs’ declarants, who already have been granted
 24 deferred action and work authorizations that extend far beyond March 5, 2018. See, e.g., Pls.’

25
 26 ⁸ Some of Plaintiffs’ declarations make this abundantly clear. One declarant, for example, states 27 that she and her fiancé have decided to “put on hold” any decision to start a family because they 28 “just do not think that it would be fair to bring a child into [their] lives if [they] can’t guarantee that child a stable, safe home.” Pls.’ App’x 268. A four-month injunction would provide no such guarantee.

1 App'x 41–42, 108, 186, 401, 448, 553, 1368, 1448. As for the declarants contemplating pursuing 2 a medical residency, they similarly would stand to benefit little from Plaintiffs' requested
 3 injunction because, as one notes, "residencies are three to eight years [long]." Id. at 723. Plaintiffs 4 also reference the unavailability of advance parole and proffer a declaration from an individual
 5 who was invited to present research at conferences in Malta and Germany. Id. at 1,323. The Malta 6 conference has already taken place, however, and the German conference will conclude within 7 days of this filing. See id. The declaration mentions no other pending invitations between now
 8 and March 5, 2018, and thus does not suffice to demonstrate irreparable harm.⁹

9 Finally, Plaintiffs submit declarations positing a likelihood of irreparable harm stemming 10 from the expiration of, and inability to renew, work authorizations—for educational officials, lost 11 funding from students who might be unable to pay their tuition costs or qualify for financial aid in 12 the absence of a work authorization, and for nonprofits and local governments, lost services from 13 those who currently work in their communities. Id. at 502–03, 1348–49. However, those 14 declarations neither explain why such harm is likely to occur between now and March 5, 2018, nor 15 how the requested injunctive relief (which would only affect the discrete group of individuals who 16 lack DACA status or whose status is set to expire by that date) would abate such harm.

17 IV. Balancing of the Equities and the Public Interest

18 The final two factors, the public interest and the balance of the equities, also weigh against 19 granting Plaintiffs' motion. These factors merge when the government is a party. Drakes Bay 20 Oyster Co. v. Jewell, 747 F.3d 1073, 1092 (9th Cir. 2014). As noted above, the federal 21 government possesses broad authority over the subject of immigration and the status and presence 22 of aliens in this country. Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 394 (2012). This includes 23 significant discretion as to whether, and under what circumstances, to grant discretionary relief

24 ⁹ Two other declarations submitted by Plaintiffs also fail to suffice. One references the Winter
 25 2017 California-Mexico Dreamers Study Abroad Program by the California-Mexico Studies
 26 Center, while the other describes international travel that is "common" for students pursuing a 27 Masters degree in public health at the Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health to take in 28 January of each year. Pls.' App'x 670, 1479. Neither declaration explains, however, how the inability to take such trips renders DACA recipients unable "to pursue [their] chosen profession," much less how any such harm is irreparable. Ariz. Dream Act Coal. v. Brewer, 855 F.3d 957, 978 (9th Cir. 2017).

1 to individuals not lawfully in this country, such as deferred action. Here, the Acting Secretary 2 decided to pursue an approach in which grants of deferred action would “be decided on a case by 3 case basis.” DACA Memo 2 (AR 2). In adopting this approach, the Secretary sought to 4 implement an orderly rescission of the prior policy and minimize the potential for disruption. See
 5 Rescission Policy, 4 (AR 255); see also Press Release, DHS, Statement from Acting Secretary
 6 Duke on the Rescission of DACA (Sept. 5, 2017), <https://go.usa.gov/xncuM>.

7 The injunctive relief sought by Plaintiffs would frustrate and displace both the Secretary’s 8 substantive judgment as to how her prosecutorial discretion should be exercised, as well as her 9 further judgment as to how best to transition between policies, while providing minimal, if any, 10 relief to the harms identified by Plaintiffs for the reasons discussed above. Accordingly, this 11 factor weighs strongly against granting Plaintiffs’ the injunction they seek. See All. for the Wild Rockies, 632 F.3d at 1138 (“We will not grant a preliminary injunction, however, unless those 12 public interests outweigh other public interests that cut in favor of not issuing the injunction.”).

14 V. Any Injunctive Relief Should be Narrowly Drawn

15 For the reasons discussed above, the Court should deny Plaintiffs’ motion in its entirety.
 16 If, however, the Court were to disagree, it nevertheless should reject Plaintiffs’ sweeping request 17 to “immediately return the administration of the DACA program to the state of its existence prior 18 to the Rescission.” Pls.’ Proposed Order at 3. Such relief would be clearly overbroad, especially 19 to the extent it applies to individuals who are not parties to this action and whose claims are not 20 currently addressed in Plaintiffs’ motion.

21 Constitutional and equitable principles require that injunctive relief be limited to 22 redressing a plaintiff’s own cognizable injuries. Article III requires that “a plaintiff must 23 demonstrate standing . . . for each form of relief that is sought.” Town of Chester v. Laroe Estates, Inc., 137 S. Ct. 1645, 1650 (2017). “The remedy” sought must therefore “be limited to the 25 inadequacy that produced the injury in fact.” Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 357 (1996). And 26 equitable principles independently require that injunctions “be no more burdensome to the 27 defendant than necessary to provide complete relief to the plaintiffs.” Madsen v. Women’s Health
Ctr., Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 765 (1994).

1 Any injunction the Court enters should thus be limited to relieving the specific injury of 2 only those individual Plaintiffs whom the Court determines have a cognizable claim and will 3 suffer irreparable harm in the absence of an injunction. See Bresgal v. Brock, 843 F.2d 1163, 4 1170 (9th Cir. 1987) (“Where relief can be structured on an individual basis, it must be narrowly 5 tailored to remedy the specific harm shown,” and should not extend broader than is “necessary to 6 give prevailing parties the relief to which they are entitled.” (emphasis omitted)).

7 CONCLUSION

8 For the foregoing reasons, Plaintiffs’ motion for provisional relief should be denied.
